خلاصه مقاله:

Imam Ali's newly established government faced an uproar caused by a group named Nakesin during its early ages when its foundations were still being strengthened. This group pledged allegiance to Imam Ali freely, but then they left Medina with the excuse of going for Omreh pilgrimage, yet indeed they had the intention to conspire against Imam by forming a new front and challenging his government. It was the adventures of this group which sparked the flames of Jamal Battle, made Imam lose control of Basra, and paved the way for the first civil war in Islam. This article, through utilizing a descriptive-analytic method, makes attempt to respond to this fundamental question that what kind of logic dominated Jamal companions' behavior during the decline of Basra. The findings of this article demonstrated that in contrast to their claim for execution of justice and taking revenge for Osman Murder, Nakesin resorted to deceit and seduction, hypocrisy, perfidy, treachery, rancor, discrimination, and oppression to take control of a city which previously had sworn allegiance to the ruling of Imam Ali (AS) and consequently they made it the basement of their rebellion and insurrection against Imam.
